WILSON WOMEN GET OUT EXTRA

[By United Press]
LOS ANGELES, Oct. 19. — The Wilson women's "dignified protest" to the Hughes special on its arrival here consisted of clamorous efforts to sell them copies of the afternoon papers, a "Wilson Edition." They cried, "Extra, All About the Man Who Kept Us Out of War." Immediately the Republicans put the visitors into automobiles and paraded to the Alexandria hotel. They were led by a band and Hughes banners

Senator Newlands at Verdi Tells of Accomplishments of Administration

RENO, Oct. 19.—All Verdi turned out last night to greet Senator Francis G. Newlands, who made one of the most comprehensive and forceful addresses delivered during the present campaign. The insanity of nations tearing at each other's throats with America standing by offering a helping hand, but powerless to stop the carnage, was one of the pictures he drew. He declared that it was a monumental blessing that Woodrow Wilson stood at the helm and prevented this nation's entanglement in the embroilment.

Chairman Sam Pickett of the Democratic State Central committee led the expedition from this city. Besides Senator Newlands he was accompanied by James Finch, Prince Hawkins, J. O'Sullivan and newspaper men.

A. A. Burke, E. L. Drappo, Dan Dinkie and a number of other county candidates drove to Verdi and met the voters.

Senator Newlands in commencing his speech spoke of the candidates on the Democratic ticket as men whose character and ability entitled them to the support of their fellow-citizens. He dwelt at considerable length particularly upon the fitness of Mr. Caine for the position to which he aspired and upon the proved capacity of Senator Pittman in his representation of this state in the United States senate and his loyalty to its interests. He referred to the conspicuous position which he had attained, not only in legislation but in everything that related to western interests.

The Wilson Administration

Senator Newlands reviewed briefly the remarkable achievements of the Democratic party under the leadership of Mr. Wilson in progressive and constructive legislation relating to the tariff, the banks, the trusts, the trade commission, child labor, rural credits, social justice and the elevation of the conditions of labor. Whilst some might claim that the Democratic party had moved too fast and too far, yet no one would deny that in all domestic legislation the movement had been in the right direction and had been in marked contrast with the apathy of the Republican party in meeting the demands of the American people for needed reforms. So general was the acquiescence in this domestic legislation that it had been hardly made the subject of mention or attack in this campaign by our opponents and they were confining themselves almost entirely to criticism of our foreign policy and to the strike.

The policies, therefore, of the administration regarding war, both foreign and civil or industrial, were the subject of attack, for it must be remembered that in addition to the external complications growing out of our relations with Germany and Mexico there was presented a domestic complication amounting, if the strike had been realized, to civil war, which would have meant the paralysis of commerce, the cutting off of food supplies, the excitement outside of the labor organizations of the turbulent and vicious forces which always assert themselves in such conditions and the final use of the inadequate military forces of the country to restore order. These were the calamitous consequences which the president sought to avoid by a connected scheme of legislation meeting the present emergency and guarding against future emergencies of a similar nature.

In considering these questions, Mr. Newlands said, the American people must have regard for the policy which has been urged during so many years by American statesmanship that reason and not force should be employed in the settlement of international difficulties and that diplomatic parity, mediation and arbitration were to be employed in the place of cannon and shot and shell. They must also recollect that owing to the prominence of the world discussion that had been going on for the pacific adjustment of disputes in which the United States had taken the leading part the United States had refused under a Republican administration to join in the movement for large armies and armaments and that the Democratic administration entered into power without the forces either on land or sea essential to the maintenance of a conspicuous place in military contention. So far had the United States gone in this particular as to make nineteen treaties with as many different countries pledging the governments concerned not to resort to arms, whatever the provocation might be, until a year had passed, during which mediation and arbitration might be employed. In view of these facts the much ridiculed notes became a necessary part of the machinery for pacific adjustment. It was impossible to settle the contentions unless the parties could reason with each other and correspondence accompanied by tolerance and patience was necessary to carry out the policy of which the United States had been so strong a defender and whose wisdom our people contended was demonstrated by the mad folly with which European nations had rushed into a mutually destructive war.

The Mexican Situation

Pursuing this line of thought, Mr. Newlands declared regarding the Mexican situation that the conditions for the past five years have been such as to make it difficult for the American government to move in any direction without incurring the liability of severe criticism. The fundamental difficulty has been that for the last five years there has not been in Mexico a government with which any one could deal. It would be about as difficult to negotiate with chaos as to negotiate with Mexico for there was no personal organization that one could see or touch that had any real responsibility or power to bind the whole people or to secure obedience from them.

Easy to Conquer Mexico

It would have been comparatively easy, said Mr. Newlands, to conquer Mexico by organizing an army of half a million men at an annual cost of half a billion dollars that would have gradually advanced from one end to the other, taken possession, restored order and created a military government for the maintenance of order. But that would have been conquest, not pacification, whatever the motive might be, whether benevolence or dominion, and would have been violative of our long-declared policy that we have no intention to interfere with the national

MOB RULE COLLAPSES AND GREEK TROOPS NOW CONTROL SITUATION

Fear Is Thrown Into Ranks of Rioters When Told That American Vessels Would Arrive and Marines Be Sent Ashore to Quell Disturbances

[By United Press]

ATHENS, Oct. 19.—Greek troops control the situation, following the collapse of the riots on the reports that an American fleet was coming to intervene. This disheartened the mobs, as they believed the newspaper reports that the Americans would arrive in a few hours and land marines. The leaders, however, continue their attempts to reorganize the dispersing mobs and continue demonstrations. It is reported that King Constantine is conferring with the allies' diplomats and is urging that the leading supporters do not cause more violence.

life or the independence of any of our central American or South American neighbors; that on the contrary we regard them as sister republics whose national life is as sacred as our own and whose territory and institutions are to be protected against foreign and monarchial aggression as vigorously as our own; that the Monroe Doctrine means the maintenance of their national life against foreign aggression and our moral and physical support were it threatened in such a way as to imperil their liberties.

Pan America

The sentiment in favor of a Pan-American policy has been growing because of the friendly professions of the statesmen of the United States and suspicion and distrust on the part of our sister republics have been gradually lessening. Such suspicion and distrust were based upon the experience of the Mexican war in which practically we not only wrested Texas from Mexico but two-thirds of her most valuable territory now constituting six or seven states, and also upon the lack of sympathy between the Latin race which has dominated in central and South America and the Anglo-Saxon race which has dominated in North America.

Will Hold Court in Reno

[By United Press]

Judge Mark A. Averill of the Fifth Judicial district is expected in Reno from Tonopah today to temporarily take the place of Judge Moran in department No. 1 of the local district court.

Pan-American unity must be maintained if we are to protect the Central American and South American continent against the ambitious views of European empires. It would disappear in a moment if the United States were to take aggressive action against any American republic.

It has been necessary, therefore, to move regarding Mexico with unusual caution, tolerance and patience. Turbulent, misgoverned, divided, torn by factions and incapable of wise administration as Mexico is any move upon the part of the United States, even though dictated by high motives of ultimate beneficence to the Mexican people, would be regarded as a blow aimed at the national life of Mexico and we would have arrayed against us every Central American and South American republic, fearful lest they in turn should come under our punitive and coercive policy. Patience and tolerance, therefore, regarding Mexico have been the predominant policies of both the Taft and the Wilson administrations, not because we feared Mexico or the Central and South American republics, or because we doubted our ability to hold our own in any contest with them, but

Mark of Distinction Paid Reporter by Owners of Reno State Journal

RENO, Oct. 19.—Party candidates and Democrats are laughing about an amusing incident that occurred in the palatial offices of the Reno Journal yesterday morning. It is said that one more has been added to the long list of undesirables who have been ejected from the sacred precincts of the "Man Without a Party."

The occurrence came out of an attempt by F. E. Becker, handling some of the publicity for the Democrats, to secure a cut of Woodrow Wilson. The Journal is the only print shop in town that has such an articles of the size desired, but has carefully refrained from printing it of late because Kilborn's ambassadorial ambitions were thwarted by the present administration.

Mr. Becker sought the foreman of the composing room to inquire about the cut, but was finally ordered out of the building by "Pa" and "Ma" Kilborn, the door being carefully held open to permit of easy egress. Thus it happens that the secrets of the Journal's inner mechanism still remain sacredly inviolate.
